The knowledge of breeding dogs.

Taken from H.Lee.Robinson

Just breeding two dogs that you own does not make you a "breeder" any more than changing the oil on your lawn mower makes you a mechanic.

Have you studied the field extensively, or are you getting your tips from a self-proclaimed internet expert that has no knowledge and experience?

Have you consistently produced solid working animals time and time again as a renowned family of dogs – this only come by real experience and over time.

Be careful who you get advice from.

Those of us that have extensive experience and knowledge in the field of breeding often notice that the loudest mouths on Facebook that discuss "breeding ethics" typically have no idea what they are talking about.

In fact, most of the "breeder police" give the worst advice on breeding and it is obvious they have no idea of natural selection or genetics.

The only real fact is ... you get out what you put in.

Do it right.

If you aren't dedicated enough to study the subjects on your working dogs breed's, genetics, natural selection, etc... Don't call yourself a breeder. Please don't.

I am going to tell you that your denial of this misleads people that are seeking sound advice.
